INVERNESS

THE WELL-KNOWN SPORTING ESTATE OF CORRIMONY

situated at the head of Glen Urquhart, and extending to an area of about 10,000 ACRES.

The hill ground is equally adapted for grouse or deer: 25 to 30 stags are killed in a season. CORRIMONY HOUSE stands amidst magnificent Highland scenery, and contains three reception rooms, billiard room, fourteen principal bed and dressing rooms, nine servants' bedrooms, four bathrooms, and domestic offices upon the ground floor.

ELECTRIC LIGHT AND CENTRAL HEATING.

Two garages, stabling, etc., and five cottages for estate servants. Twenty-five to 30 stags are regularly obtained, and before the war 200 to 300 brace of grouse were usually shot in addition to a good mixed bag. Before afforestation over 1,000 brace of grouse were regularly obtained, and the ground is especially suited for grouse shooting.

TROUT FISHING IN LOCH AND RIVER.

The hill grazing is let as one holding, with good house, steading, and cottages. There is a large area of valuable young plantations.

To be offered for SALE by AUCTION in the Hanover Square Estate Room, on Wednesday, October 17th, 1923, at 2.30 p.m. (unless previously disposed of privately).

Solicitors, Messrs. BELL, BANNERMAN & FINLAY, W.S., 4, Randolph Place, Edinburgh.

THE MANOR HOUSE, HASLEMERE.

This fine old Jacobean HOUSE occupies a high situation with glorious views to the south. The old features have been well preserved, though all modern improvements have been installed. The servants' quarters are spacious and very conveniently arranged. The House contains some fourteen bedrooms, four reception rooms and hall. The gardens are some of the most beautiful in the whole country. They are built in terraces falling to the south and leading to the lakes or ponds below; garage and stabling, two cottages.

This Property is one of the best preserved old Manor Houses existing, and it has the almost unique advantages of a high position, well removed from all other buildings, and in the heart of the country, yet near an important residential town and within daily reach of London. To be offered for SALE by AUCTION on the 24th September next, with eight acres of land (more can be purchased if required) at the upset price of £8,000.

SEWAGE PURIFICATION

If your house is on an unsewered area you have to face the problem of sewage purification and disposal.

Modern sanitation calls for something better than the cesspool with its manifold objections. Our semi-septic system produces an effluent comparable to rainwater in appearance, free from smell and safe to deliver to any ditch without causing the slightest nuisance.

The cost is from £50, completely installed, for a bungalow or cottage.

For a Harley Street physician, for whom we installed a plant ten years ago, we have just completed another scheme at his new house. Ten years' satisfaction to the client brought us a repeat order. Why not follow the example?

Full particulars and prices on application. Write for Booklet No. 5.

CHARACTER

IN pipes as in men it is character which tells. The reputation borne by the GBD was won over 60 years ago; it remains unassailed. In men character is the result of birth, environment and upbringing. The character of a pipe is decided by similar influences. The GBD at half-a-guinea is the direct lineal descendant of the first Briar pipe manufactured. Its remarkable quality and finish are due to the processes of selection and manufacture which have been perfected during generations of experience. We guarantee that the Briar (French Bruyère), is exclusively Genuine Old Briar Root. Each pipe has been subjected to our special hardening and seasoning process, and is supplied in all the best-known shapes and packed in our special "Pochette" polisher.

These pipes can be obtained from most high-class tobacconists. We will gladly supply you with an illustrated list and the name of your nearest retailer. From friends abroad who cannot obtain our pipes locally we cordially invite enquiries and information as to the nearest importer.

EDWARD PIERCE THE SCULPTOR.

THE Wren Bicentenary has made us familiar with a good many portraits of Sir Christopher, whether as a young man or a bird-like gentleman with a beaky nose and a huge wig; but the one portrait of him which seems, more than any other, really to present him to our eyes was reserved for this last volume of the Walpole Society to reproduce. Anybody who has been into the Ashmolean at Oxford will remember the bust, for it greets you in the first room at the top of the stairs. The face, whose ever it was, would hold you; but when one sees that it is Wren, the name and the face combine to fascinate. It differs from the portraits in every conceivable way; for here, as Mrs. Poole very truly expresses it, "the whole noble personality is presented to us with extraordinary vividness. The marble seems scarcely to contain the all but breathing life within it, and the expression, to which every line, every touch, contributes, conveys both intellect and feeling and eager imagination, and surely, too, the happiness of the creative artist." As we meet that extraordinarily simple and penetrating gaze and see the wide sensitive mouth, we feel that here indeed is the one man in whom "never met such a mechanical hand and so philosophical a mind."

Edward Pierce had ample opportunity of knowing Wren, for, as "sculptor and mason," he was directly in charge of the fabric of St. Laurence Jewry and St. Matthew, Friday Street. Sculpture at that time was still principally concerned with architecture, and Pierce stood in some degree to Wren as Nicolas Stone did to Inigo Jones. We may assume that the bulk of his architectural sculpture is lost in the fabrics he adorned, but a sufficient number of his busts remain for him to be recognised as a real artist, while his Wren masterpiece, as Mrs. Poole observes, "is a great work of art which is also the portrait of a very great man."

The facts of his life, as unearthed by Mrs. Poole, are few and simple. He was born about 1634 to Edward Pierce, a painter of ceilings and wall frescoes, and employed by Van Dyck. In 1668 he was "chosen of the Livery" of the Painters' Company and died in 1698. There is a portrait of him by Isaac Fuller at Sudeley Castle, formerly at Strawberry Hill. The dates of his work are to a great extent conjectural. The earliest, possibly, is his terra-cotta bust of John Milton at Christ's College, Cambridge, executed probably between 1654 and 1658. There are then four of Oliver Cromwell, of which the finest, infinitely, is the marble one, also at the Ashmolean; after the Wren bust this Cromwell is Pierce's next most successful and original work. A counterpart in terra-cotta is in the National Portrait Gallery, while a much inferior, though signed, bronze, obviously executed many years later, is in the London Museum. The marble counterpart is in the possession of the Earl of Wemyss. The Wren was executed about 1673, according to the architect's son. Pierce's two remaining works are in City halls: a full-length, in wood, of Sir William Walworth—a very inferior work—is at the Fishmongers'; while an excellent marble bust of Thomas Evans, the venerable master, is at the Painters'; these date from 1684-88.

In architecture Pierce's known engagements may be quoted from Mrs. Poole's table:

- 1671-81. St. Laurence Jewry—building and stone carving.
- 1680. St. Mary-le-Bow—the Dragon weather-vane.
- 1680-81. St. Clement Danes—building.
- 1682-87. St. Matthew, Friday Street—building.
- 1689-96. Hampton Court—sculpture for gardens
- 1694. Seven Dials—the Column.
- 1687-88. A design for a tomb for the Duke of Buckingham.

Of his work at Hampton Court little survives, though a marble vase is now at Windsor, the pedestal for which remains at Hampton Court. Pierce very probably, like Stone, executed numerous tombs and monuments in country churches, but it is the work of a lifetime to trace them out. Apart from that impossible desideratum, Mrs. Poole's essay is a real addition to English art history.

The same volume contains nineteen pages of reproductions from an English Bible picture book of the fourteenth century, described by Dr. James. There are fifteen pictures of the Old Testament, some of which are of extraordinary vigour and grace, and more numerous pictures of the Life of Christ. Mr. J. A. Knowles contributes an illuminating article on Henry Gyles, the York glass painter, and Mr. Campbell Dodgson catalogues the very little known but delightful etchings of Sir David Wilkie.

THE SAILOR IN POTTERY

WEDGWOOD CAMEOS

OF early English pottery, those pieces which apparently have been suggested by incidents which the potters saw in the life around them are by far the most interesting and lovable. English pottery has this advantage over English porcelain: very seldom did it copy or imitate the products of China, Sèvres or Meissen in figure subjects. There was nothing new-fangled about it. It abounded in homely representations of rural English worthies such as gardeners, hay-makers, vendors of fruit on the street, all treated with a broad, genial humour without a suspicion of malice. The parson, however, was subject to keen satire in the Tithe Pig figures and the Vicar and Moses. This truly English school of sculpture reproduced the English folk in all their sturdy strength; the porcelain school, on the contrary, developed a thin and delicate type which has not altogether disappeared in our sculpture of to-day. The historical importance of the Staffordshire figures is great. At a period when our Navy and merchantmen were all-important the sailor is most unusual in porcelain figures; but in the more homely pottery we find several excellent representations of him. There is, firstly, the sailor Toby jug in which he is dressed in a dark blue, sometimes brown, coat, grey waistcoat, yellow neckerchief and white breeches striped with blue. Holding a jug in one hand and a glass or horn of liquor in the other, he is seated on a seaman's chest as stated in the inscription:

"Hullo, Brother Briton
Whoever thou may be
Sit down on that chest of
Hard dollars by me
And drink a health
To all sealors bold."

This Toby was reproduced in COUNTRY LIFE, June 16th, 1923, page lxx. Another on the same page is modelled after the portrait of Lord Howe, the admiral, known to his men as "Black Dick," who figured in the French and American war and defeated the French fleet off Ushant, 1794. Both of these are grave types of the sailor; others show the rollicking, jovial or sentimental side of his character in the love-sick sailorman. This is the subject of a fine relief in an oval medallion by Ralph Wood of Burslem. It shows a young lady, wearing a formidable brown and cream head-dress and fastened-up gown with fichu and apron displaying a pea green petticoat, tripping along the path, followed by Jack in an attitude of adoration and wearing the same garb as the sailor Toby, with a cane in his arm and a cutlass at his back. In front runs the lady's lap-dog. The skilful modelling, the artistic quality of colour and the purity of the glaze constitute this medallion a triumph of pottery. It takes its title and composition from a print by an artist who worked for Carrington Bowles of the map and print warehouse, 69, St. Paul's Church Yard, London, about 1760, which is reproduced in COUNTRY LIFE, December 23rd, 1922, page 838. The title given is "Jack on a Cruise," with his remark for the lady's ear, "Avast there. Back your Mainsail." There are several differences between the print and medallion. The figures are placed much nearer each other; the little dog in the foreground is, in the print, running in the background. The lower part of Jack's coat does not show on his right side in the print, where both the figures wear shoe buckles, and so on. The Staffordshire modeller has infused a more youthful spirit into the figures; that of Jack recalls Edward Thompson's:

"No gallant sailor ever fail'd
If Cupid fill'd his sails."

There are, by Wood, figures of similar treatment entitled "Patricia and her Lover," of very charming technique. All these are the property of Mr. Frank Partridge, King Street, St. James's. A tribute to the sailor, too, was the pottery made in celebration of the taking of Portobello by Admiral Vernon in 1739; it is the subject of a fine bowl in the British Museum by John Astbury; a teapot in the shape of the ship Burford, Admiral Vernon's ship; and jugs with inscriptions, "The British Glory revived—By Admiral Vernon—He took Porto Bello—with six ships only—Nov. ye 22nd, 1739," and modelled with arms, emblems and ships, partly in formation of battle.

Portraits of sailors, of course, occur in the great collection of cameo portraits executed by Wedgwood. The celebrated head of Captain Cook was among those modelled by Flaxman. The cameo of Admiral Keppel, who captured Belleisle in 1761 and was tried and acquitted of charges of misconduct, the charges being declared false and malicious, belonged to the Jermyn Street collection and is now in the Victoria and Albert Museum. These, however, do not give a favourable impression of Wedgwood's cameos, certainly nothing like that of Wedgwood's portrait modelled by Hackwood on the beautiful lilac ground which distinguishes an example at Messrs. Stoner and Evans. This lilac ground occurs in the portrait of George III in the same collection, in charming little ovals showing groups of Cupids with torches and a locket-shaped piece with Cupid displaying wreaths of flowers, in gold mounts.

These, Wedgwood explained, were for rings, lockets, bracelets, snuffboxes and a number of other trinkets and also for buttons. There is a fine series of plaques of oblong shape with corners cut off, showing companies of

"JACK ON A CRUISE." A MEDALLION BY RALPH WOOD OF BURSLEM.

Cupids at play, with birds, helmet and trumpets when driving the chariot of Ceres. With it are four delicate circular plaques with lilac ground and green border and a larger oval specimen in lilac with black and white border. Beautiful, too, is the small circular medallion showing a Greek girl pouring water or oil on a pot of flames; the ground is lilac, the border green. Two unusual oblong plaques with the corners cut off represent the Sale of Cupids, modelled by Hackwood and the chariot of dawn on a cloud. These have black grounds and grey borders with ornament in white. A most impressive oval medallion is framed in a lace-like pattern in black and white; the subject on a green ground represents an attendant maid pouring oil from a vase on the foot of a reclining lady who holds a cloth to her face. There is a very bold, executed set of circular medallions in blue and white, the subject being Cupids at an altar, with evidently Minerva and Diana standing by in the one case, in the other the caduceus of Mercury between two cornucopias. Another in blue and white contains a figure of Ceres and her lions, the border showing the signs of the zodiac. This border appears on another medallion decorated with the Chariot of Aurora on a lilac background. Three exquisite oval medallions in lilac, representing a portion of the Sale of Cupids, and two sacrificial scenes, are enclosed in borders of leaf ribbon on dark blue. A circular medallion stands by itself. It is on a dark blue ground and illustrates the Fall of the Bastille. On the battlements is a crowd of people plying pickaxes and hammers under a white cloud in the dark sky. In the border appears the title "Le Despotisme abattu," and the date 1798.

THE AUTOMOBILE WORLD.

COMMON DANGER, COMMON SENSE AND THE POLICE

THIS summer season is being marked by an apparent epidemic of road accidents which, judging from the lurid reports published in the newspapers, are due almost entirely to reckless and dangerous driving on the part of motorists. Published reports of police and coroners' court cases make it appear that the vast majority of motorists go out and drive with an utter disregard to other road users and their safety, and that the resulting accidents are entirely the fault of drivers who either cannot or will not exercise proper control over their vehicles—always mechanically propelled. At the same time there is recorded a lively activity in police circles and a vigorous campaign by the police against all users of mechanically propelled vehicles. And yet the police efforts seem to have little or no effect in reducing the toll of accidents.

It would be idle to deny or conceal three cardinal facts emerging from this chaos: (1) that accidents are increasing in number and seriousness; (2) that in most of these accidents mechanically propelled vehicles are involved; and (3) that some drivers of mechanically propelled vehicles are unfit to be at the wheel, either by virtue of their temperaments, which lead them to ignore entirely the rights and safety of others, or by virtue of their incompetence, due, mostly, not to inexperience, but to lack of the elementary essentials of road sense. Further, there is a very important deduction, worthy of being called a fact so clear is it, also to be drawn. This is that the police efforts as at present conducted are entirely unsuited for the end to which they are presumably directed—the making of the roads safe places on which to travel.

Only by careful investigation and thought can the true cause of this unfortunate position be arrived at, and only after the cause has been clearly ascertained can a cure be attempted with any hope of success. In the first place there is the all-dominating consideration that the traffic on English roads is increasing enormously and that those roads are entirely unsuited to meet the demands, for which they were never designed. Chiefly, the increase in traffic takes the form of increased numbers of mechanically propelled vehicles, but this is not its sole form; pedal cycles are an important item in all road traffic and they are increasing quite as rapidly as are motor cars and motor cycles. Horse traffic is diminishing, but it is not decreasing to the same extent that other forms are increasing and so it remains a factor to be counted. The adaptation of our roads to the new demands is a matter that will take time and plenty of it; it is going on apace all over the country, but until it is complete other steps must be taken to render existing roads at least usable if not enjoyable.

MISTAKEN OBSERVATIONS AND MIS-LEADING DEDUCTIONS.

In 99 per cent. of the accidents reported in the papers a mechanically propelled vehicle is cited as the chief agent and, superficially at least, this citation is quite sound. But is it so fundamentally? The driver of a car swerves to avoid a wobbling cyclist, an uncontrolled horse or a pedestrian who blindly steps into the road; obsessed by the idea of avoiding the danger nearest to hand the car driver has no time to recover before he crashes into something else—anything from a perambulator to a coal cart—and he is blamed for driving all across the road and for not looking where he is going! As often as not rapid acceleration has been necessary for his avoidance of the first obstruction and so he meets the second at higher speed than that at which he was originally travelling, with further harm to his defence in a court of law. An independent observer, who claims to have seen the whole of the crash, has really seen only the crash itself and has paid no attention to the events that led up to it; they contain no interest for him and so his observation is useless, and actually misleading by virtue of its real, though generally unrecognised, incompleteness. There is a serious lack of appreciation of this point in courts of law. Connected with this is the fact that the human race evolves slowly and is slower than the lower animals to adapt itself to new conditions. We have all observed how the hens and chickens that run about on the highway have come to adapt their behaviour to the conditions imposed by the newly arrived rapidly moving vehicle, and we can see how their brethren in districts where the swift vehicle seldom penetrates display the indifference to the potential juggernaut that was the fatal trait of some of their ancestors. The human being is not so readily absorptive. The pedestrian who sees an approaching car will, if he feels like it, give enough room in the highway for the car to pass, but he never thinks of what may be coming from behind him which may necessitate the car driver taking much more room than he has been offered. The cyclist or horse driver who hears the warning horn of a faster vehicle from behind nearly always turns round to look at it and to make sure that it is there. His mentality seems unable to let him realise that the sound of a horn cannot come from nothing nor that his turning round can do no good, but may be productive of harm, in that it diverts his attention from what should be his primary concern—where he is going.

It takes two to make a collision and it is false logic to attribute the blame to the driver or vehicle capable of the higher speed. Although wonderfully controllable, the car is not so "nippy" and so handy on its wheels as the cyclist or the pedestrian on his feet. The Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police has recently issued orders that the streets are to be made safer, and the sympathetic good wishes of the whole community will be with his orders. But one wonders whether his instruction that police attention is to be directed to the drivers of mechanically propelled vehicles is the most effective that he could have given to ensure observation of his orders in both letter and spirit. I am convinced that, were the observation complete, 75 per cent. of London street accidents could be attributed to their origins—which is what really matters—to pedestrians and horse-drawn vehicles. You may punish every driver who exceeds 20 m.p.h. or even 10 m.p.h., but you will not thus obviate his need to swerve suddenly to avoid the lively horse with a stupid driver nor the blindly walking pedestrian stepping off the kerb with his back to approaching traffic. Nor will these measures have any useful effect on that most dangerous of all London drivers, the taximan, who acts as though the whole road belonged to him.

SPEED AND DANGER.

All competent observers are agreed that speed and danger are in no way essentially and causally connected. Under certain circumstances high speed may be productive of danger, but under other conditions so may low speed. I do not want to make this note a mere record of personal opinions or experiences, but because my experience on the road as cyclist, horse rider and car and motorcycle driver is now approaching the completion of its third decade and because it embraces practically the whole of Great Britain and a useful slice of the Continent, some of my observations may be useful and especially in relation to this connection—or the lack of it—between speed and safety. The most dangerous driving I have ever seen is that of the market gardeners' carts of the French Riviera and that of the evening newspaper vans in London. The first are extremely slow in their progress and movements, the second are very fast; the danger of neither is due to their lack or possession of speed, but to the way in which they are or are not controlled.

Unfortunately, but quite naturally, official English ideas as to what constitutes safe or dangerous driving are largely determined by the law which was settled chiefly by the Motor Car Act of 1903. Owing to the vast improvement in car design and construction and especially in the matter of controllability, a car speed that would have been highly dangerous in 1903 is perfectly safe to-day, and that this fact is widely realised—though not quite widely enough—is proved by the frankly expressed expectation that the 20 m.p.h. speed limit will shortly cease to exist. But so long as it is possible for a conviction for dangerous driving to be obtained on the evidence of a single police constable, then some speed limit is essential for the protection of motorists themselves. A speed limit of 30 m.p.h., or perhaps 35 m.p.h., would legalise the use of the roads by the vast majority of motorists; at present practically every driver breaks the law every time he ventures on to the road, which is a position recognised by the authorities as something worse than Gilbertian.

INCOMPETENT DRIVERS.

There are two kinds of unfit car drivers: those who cannot and those who will not drive as they ought. The first may be sub-divided into novices and those entirely lacking in road sense and possessed of mentality that prevents them from acquiring it. The novice will cure himself and it is seldom that he will cause any injury to others in the process, for he is generally marked by excessive caution; he may be a nuisance, but seldom a danger. The man or woman—and in this case it is mostly the woman who is at fault—entirely unable to acquire road sense ought to be prohibited from controlling on the highway anything bigger or faster than a perambulator, but it is difficult to see how such an ideal of prohibition could be realised. Those who will not drive properly are frequently highly skilled at the wheel, but obsessed with an entirely mistaken idea that cutting things fine and general "showing off" are hall marks of good driving. It is with this class that direct police action is to be most encouraged, and it is by this class and by the class without sense that dangerous driving is mostly perpetrated.

The whole secret of proper conduct on the road is the display of adequate consideration for others, and the greatest mistake made by those who pillory the dangerous driver is to assume that he exists only in the ranks of motorists. The young blood on a sports motor cycle with open exhaust, and the taxi-drivers who care for nothing and nobody but themselves, have their counterparts in the char-à-bancs passenger who flings out streamers that wrap round the faces of the driver and passengers of a following car, in the horse driver who hugs the crown of the road, and in the three or four cyclists who persist in riding abreast. But it is always the motor driver who gets the blame and the police seem utterly blind to the other side of the picture.

POLICE ACTION—RIGHT AND WRONG.

In many parts of the country there is evident a liveness on the part of the police that one would like to think was due to a desire to suppress dangerous driving; but the events, unfortunately, belie the belief. Only one class of road user is attacked and the methods employed are not calculated to improve the amenities of the road, in fact I would go so far as to say that they are well calculated to reduce them! There is no sound reason for characterising the whole of the motoring community as particularly deficient in common-sense and an appreciation of justice. Seldom is a complaint heard from anyone caught actually committing an offence and duly punished. But very numerous are the complaints from those caught and fined for offences that they honestly think they have not committed or fined excessively for mere technical offences. What is the natural result? Is it not the thought, "Well, if I am to be caught and fined in any case I may as well have a run for my money?" Thus, by blind persecution the police actually encourage a disregard for the law.

The police who judge the speed of a car by its sound and secure convictions for excessive speed in a ten mile limit on this ground, as they do or used to do in Guildford and Shere, do not imbue their victims with a respect for the law nor with a sense of caution; they invite more serious offences, which incidentally the recent confession at Neath at least suggests may not be always undesired! Severe fines for fractional errors in the size of a number plate or for leaving a car standing at the side of the road for more than a couple of minutes—although the law is supposed to allow twenty—or for a driving licence left accidentally at home, do not contribute towards safer travelling, although they may help to swell local funds depleted by misgovernance. There are courts like those at Chertsey, Fareham, Kingston and Horsham where the defence put up by the accused is habitually ignored and where the fines bear no relation to the details of the offence or defence. This is not the way to cure the dangerous driver nor to lessen his potential crimes.

DANGEROUS DRIVING AND HOW TO TREAT IT.

No thinking road user would wish the really dangerous driver to be let off lightly, but every thinking man wants the offence to be proved conclusively before any penalty is inflicted. If there is dangerous driving the penalty ought to be a real deterrent from a repetition of the offence; if there is no real danger, then the accused ought to be acquitted. A fixed fine inflicted on disputable evidence is not only unjust and futile, it is a direct invitation to the commission of a real offence.

Owing to the considerable publicity given to a few cases the idea seems to be getting abroad that the drunken car driver is becoming numerous. This may or may not be the case, but it is certain that the man who takes the wheel of a car when he is not in a fit condition to control himself is a real danger and as such ought to be treated with a very firm hand. The maximum fine for being drunk at the wheel is £2; it ought certainly to be increased. But here again there is the need that no conviction should be recorded unless the offence be clearly proved. Not so long ago I was in a solicitor's office when a doctor was discussing his defence in a pending summons for being drunk at the wheel. I would have wagered quite a lot that that man was drunk while he was talking to his solicitors, but I know perfectly well that he was not. It was simply a peculiarity of manner that had, presumably, misled the police as it had misled me; but the police had persisted with their charge, although this doctor had negotiated his car through a narrow gateway at their request and had been certified as sober by the police surgeon. No reasonable penalty can be too severe for the driver who is conclusively proved to have been drunk at the wheel of a car, but this is no excuse for police concentration on the motorist. Any drunken road user is a potential danger to others and ought to be treated as such, but the police seem reluctant to take extensive action. Quite recently a drunken man lurched in front of a car driven by an acquaintance of mine who immediately reported his presence to a policeman whom he met a little farther down the road; but this policeman said it was no business of his so long as the man was on his feet, and this man, a real danger, who had been avoided by my acquaintance only, as he said, by a fluke, was left at large.

EXAMINATIONS FOR DRIVING LICENCES.

It is suggested, often, that all car drivers should undergo an examination before they are allowed to hold a licence, which would then become a certificate of competence, instead of a mere permit as it is at present. Frankly, we do not favour the proposal. There is so much difference in the standards required of drivers according to the country in which they will most commonly drive that the fixing of any common and useful standard seems a practical impossibility. Must the farmer who will drive his car only around the deserted villages of his countryside satisfy the same tests as a man who will cross Ludgate Circus every day? And what will a certificate of competence obtained in the Fens signify if its owner takes his car down to Devon? And if there are different grades of certificates, what will be the practical value of any?

SOME GENERALISATIONS.

From all that I have said it should, I think, be clear that there is no sound justification for the common practice of assuming that in every accident the motorist is always to blame. He is not the only user of the roads, and it is the very heterogeneity of modern traffic that is at the base of all the trouble that exists. To punish one member of the traffic community without even warning or attempting to educate the others is illogical, childish and futile.

Finally, there can be no doubt that the recent increase in accidents is more apparent than real. There may be some increase, but it is certainly not proportional to the increase in traffic, and the appearance of excess is primarily due to the daily newspaper "silly season" habit of collecting all details of all untoward happenings from all parts of the country into a single column with "screeching" headlines. Really, when all things are considered, especially the numbers of mechanically propelled vehicles and the stupidity of others on the roads, I am astonished that there are not many more accidents than there are.

1924 Programmes.

THE fashion set last year of announcing the next season's programme long before the Olympia Show is being followed this year by several car makers and already some half dozen programmes and prices have been announced. Of these the first was that of the Rover Co., whose intention it is to retain the popular 8 h.p. and 12 h.p. models, and to supplement them next spring with a de luxe six-cylinder car.

The Wolseley Co., in announcing their 1924 programme, display no innovations in the shape of new models, but the very comprehensive range marketed by this company since last year is being retained with an all-round, though slight, reduction in prices, except in the case of the cheapest model—the 7 h.p. at £199. It is impossible to give details at the moment of all Wolseley models for 1924, but as examples of the new prices may be mentioned the 10 h.p., ranging from £250 for the two-seater to £495 for the sports model; the "Fourteen" (actually a 15.9 h.p.) at £475 as compared with the previous £525 for the four-seater, while the two-seater costs £495; the "Fifteen" at £515 and £535 for the short and long wheel-base chassis respectively, and the two six-cylinder models of 20 h.p. and 24 h.p.

While the excellent 11.9 h.p. model will be retained, there is to be a new Bean model in the shape of a 14 h.p. de luxe car which, if half as good value as the original, should be a great success.

Deemster cars remain essentially the same in specification, but prices have been reduced by about 7 per cent. and these, it is announced, will be firm for next year.

The A.C. programme contains no new models, but the six-cylinder car—which, although announced and shown to the public some years ago, is only now getting into its stride as a production model—is to be a strong plank in the 1924 platform. The prices of all models have been reduced, while the cheapest of all—the Empire model, which is now 285 guineas—now has full equipment included (i.e., five lamps, starter, speedometer, clock, etc.). The prices of the six-cylinder car range from £435 for the two-seater chassis to £850 for the complete saloon car.

Fuel Production and Prices.

IT is a queer trait of motoring psychology that while the normal car owner cares little within a hundred pounds or so how much he pays for his car, he is deeply concerned over a difference of one penny per gallon in the cost of his fuel. Over-production in America, due partly to the development of new oil fields in California, has caused a price war among the various distributing concerns which is likely—and hoped—to have its influence on prices in Great Britain. The recent cut of 2½d. per gallon is, in at least some well informed quarters, regarded as the first of a series. It would be foolish to be optimistic, but that the belief that there may be further cuts is well founded is proved by the Customs House figures giving the weekly imports of crude oil into the British Isles. The figures show an increase of nearly 2,000,000 gallons over the previous high record of deliveries to the Anglo-Persian Oil Company's plant near Swansea. In the period covered seven full cargoes of crude oil, totalling 17,035,525 gallons, arrived from Persia to be refined into "B.P." motor spirit and other products.

As we have been told on unimpeachable authority, the price of petrol is what it will fetch, and the natural operation of the laws of supply and demand certainly promises still cheaper motoring in the near future.

ITEMS.

American Appreciation of Dunlop Enterprise.—The following is a copy of a letter sent by the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce in the United States to the Association of British Chambers of Commerce and to the American Chambers of Commerce in London: "It is with great pleasure and no small degree of pride that the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce extends felicitations to your association upon the completion of the great plant of the Dunlop Tire and Rubber Corporation in this city and the commencement of operations in the manufacture of automobile tires. We feel that there is a mutual interest on the part of our respective organisations in this big undertaking, for through the completion of this enormous American plant of the Dunlop Tire interests of your country there has been established an industrial relationship between Great Britain and the United States that can be of great mutual benefit. We know that Buffalo, through the operation of this plant, is going to benefit in the opportunities presented of studying those sterling qualities of British trade and methods that have made your industries famous throughout the world. At the same time, we trust that in return we may be able to add something in the way of American methods and procedure that will make for even better understandings and the promotion of commerce and industry between your great country and ours."

Excellent Performance of Electric Equipment.—This well describes the result of the successful 25,000 mile test (under R.A.C. rules over the Club's standard routes) of the Rotax electric lighting and starting equipment of the Crossley car, which covered 300 miles a day, six days a week, for over three months—equivalent to four years' normal running. The starting handle was never used and the engine was started 681 times without a single failure. The lighting never failed, and the only replacements were five fractured bulbs. At the close of the test the equipment was in perfect order.

Nothing depreciates cars more rapidly than housing in inferior sheds or "knocking about" in public garages.

The brochure illustrated above tells of a better way—a way by which, for the initial expenditure of a few pounds, you can have your own garage where you want it, giving perfect protection for your car and perfect convenience for cleaning, odd jobs, etc., just as needed.

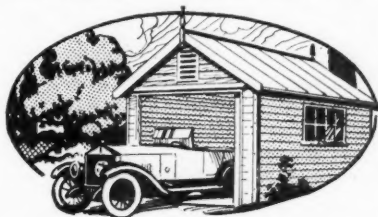

This brochure illustrates and describes the latest Fothergill model, which contains the quintessence of 50 years' experience in portable building construction, and is the finest investment in portable motor-houses available to-day.

The "Fothergill 38"

The "Fothergill 38" is supplied in various sizes and prices, starting at £23 10s. It is delivered free to any goods station within three weeks of receipt of order. It will last a lifetime and you can take it with you when you move.

Pembroke Castle was built by Arnulf de Montgomery towards the close of the 11th century. Henry VII was born here in 1456, and in the Civil War Oliver Cromwell subjected it to a six weeks' siege. From the top of the staircase is a magnificent view, while from the hall leads a flight of steps to a huge cavern in the living rock, one of the most striking phenomena in all Wales.

The Breadth of the Land

EAST and West, North and South, you will find dealers ready to give you Correct Lubrication service. This service is the supply of Gargoyle Mobiloil in sealed containers and the advice given in the Chart of Recommendations. Make the Chart your Guide and obtain the maximum power, reliability and endurance from your car.

Correct Lubrication, i.e., the grade of Gargoyle Mobiloil specified for your car in the Chart of Recommendations, is the only absolute safeguard against lubrication troubles.

This Chart, originated and brought up to date every year by the engineers of the Vacuum Oil Company Ltd., is displayed by dealers all over the country. Dealers know that the recommendations are made on genuine research and analysis. That is the reason, too, why more and more motor manufacturers endorse the recommendations of the Vacuum Oil Company Ltd., the recognised authorities on lubrication.

Remember: Ask for Gargoyle Mobiloil by the full title. It is not sufficient to say, "Give me a gallon of 'A' or 'BB'." Demand Gargoyle Mobiloil "A" or Gargoyle Mobiloil "BB," or whichever grade is specified for your car in the Chart of Recommendations.

THE LURE OF DISTINCTIVE LINE IN THE NEW WRAP COATS

THE usual scaremongers are busy with hair-raising reports as to what La Mode has in store for us during the coming autumn and winter months. If you are at all interested in dress, and a fashion chronicler necessarily is, you read, or listen, as the case may be, to these reports with an open mind, but at the same time with the discriminating senses very much alert.

The attempt that is being made in some quarters to carry slimmness to the point of actual discomfort may be dismissed with a shrug and a laugh. We are far too athletic in these days, from the ballroom to the golf course, to submit to be trammelled in any such ridiculous a way. The mannequins, poor things, elected to try out this vogue just mince along with tiny steps like a Japanese. Nor is the suggestion any more welcome that we shall accept short full skirts. The very essence of the charm of full skirts lies in their length. Besides, surely in short ones we should be emulating the première danseuse. But between these two extremes a line of reasonableness is to be visioned, one of slim elegance in which pleats, tucks, inserted panels, apron fronts and the like ingenious devices will allow of perfect freedom of movement and complete comfort, while preserving the silhouette that is unanimously accounted to be becoming to young and middle aged, stout and thin. And one of the first early autumn possessions to be acquired illustrative of this appearance is the long smart wrap-coat, a garment that has every probability of becoming an obsession with us. Throughout the summer, when its services were more ornamental than actually necessary, it carried on successfully; whereas with the first tang of autumn we shall with far more reason fly to its protective care. And it is protective in more senses than one, since beneath its all-enveloping folds we can wear out old gowns and preserve new ones. Then, because it is a wrap no woman minds being seen in it over and over again, a condition she might be sensitive over in the case of a coat and skirt, coat-frock or gown.

A propos of coat-frocks, however, many of the new model coats might easily be mistaken for one of these, especially the coats that have apron and three-tier effects in front, and many have. The backs in innumerable instances are inclined to be shapely, though of an easy fit, and in others there is to be observed a pouched appearance. A few show the short detachable slung-on cape, an adjunct that is very attractive in materials such as marocain and the new shiny black satin, but which is inclined to look cumbersome and superfluous in velours, duvetyn and wool jacquard. The latter, by the way, is an especially delightful fabric for the wrap-coat, and is being shown in several novel shades of brown, beaver and castor and black. It makes up equally successfully either with or without the assistance of fur, as it is in itself a decorative material, although always in a one-tone scheme. I fancy we shall see a number of chic black jacquard wraps this season trimmed with grey fur. Squirrel, it is said, is to be much favoured, but personally I should prefer rat chinchilla or Persian lamb.

Collars are very amusing, and range from high, loose-fitting, upstanding bands, fastening under one ear, to plain and gathered shawl shapes, via the bolster and big ruffle; while sleeves tend to width below the elbow, an appearance frequently enhanced by weird cuffs and hanging draperies. On a dark blue model the other day I saw a pair of cuffs that looked like small Eastern prayer mats just twisted round the arm to fit the wrist closely, then widening out to form a cavalier effect. There was no other touch of colour on the garment, which had a high upstanding collar of dark brown fur.

Although expressed in a nutria shade of plain French velours de laine, the model illustrated would carry out to perfection in wool jacquard. The collar, one of the ruffled shawl shapes, is of nutria fur, the fur cuffs to match being similarly ruffled. A large tortoise-shell button provides the sole fastening.

It is the exception to see fancy brocade linings in the best coats, whether these be of fur or cloth, a good heavy though soft satin or a satin striped crêpe de Chine being considered in better taste and, incidentally, costing considerably more than the ornate brocades.

Mud and beauty seem as apart as the Poles, do they not? But, as a matter of fact, they are very closely allied. The mud pack at the moment is the obsession with the skin and beauty specialist, and I happen to know that she has got hold of a very valuable discovery. In certain mud there is a wonderful clastic clay possessed of cleansing, invigorating and rejuvenating powers far surpassing the ordinary creams and massage. The best, I understand, comes from Indianapolis, and a quite satisfactory quality from the Carpathians and also from various places on the Continent. The mud pack, so called because it is left to dry upon the skin, gets to the very root of the trouble and literally wipes away blackheads, acne—in fact, any ill that skin is heir to—simply by the common-sense method of cleansing and clearing out foreign matter from the pores. Dirt, pure and simple, is at the bottom of all bad skins, and no amount of surface application will render it fundamentally better. We talk glibly enough about the beauty of a baby's skin. It is beautiful because it is clean; it has not had time to suck in dirt and objectionable matter. And what Nature has once done she is doing again with this mud. I am not grinding any particular skin specialist's axe, but advocating, since I know, the amazing efficacy of clastic clay. L. M. M.

HOLIDAYS. Are you going away for a holiday? Then send 1/6 for the acknowledged standard work on ordinary antique furniture, "THE A.B.C. HISTORY OF ANTIQUE ENGLISH FURNITURE." You very likely possess a valuable piece of antique furniture and do not know its value. In one minute you can turn it up in this book, find its history, its date and its value. This book contains 260 photos, 100 pages, and 1,500 current prices. It cost over £1,000 to produce.

FILL IN COUPON NOW. You will find it far more interesting than spending double the amount on magazines, and you will keep it all your life as a book of reference.

COUPON.—C.L. Sept. 1st, 1923. I enclose 1/6 in stamps, cheque or P.O. (unused Colonial and Foreign stamps accepted), for "THE A.B.C. HISTORY OF ANTIQUE ENGLISH FURNITURE" (second edition).
